0 TRAINMAN® 52'6" GONDOLA - RUTLAND

ESTIMATED DELIVERY 1st QUARTER 2018

Like many northeastern railroads, the Rutland traces its history back to a series of smaller roads which were combined over time to form a larger system throughout the late 1800s. Known as the "Green Mountain Gateway", the Rutland primarily operated within the state of Vermont, with lines extending into New York at the extreme north and south ends of the system. One commodity handled by the Rutland for many years was Vermont marble. Slabs of unfinished marble were and are still often transported by rail in open gondolas. The prototype for this limited edition offering was a series of 25 cars ordered by the Rutland from Pullman-Standard in 1957, numbered 1000-1024. These cars would look right at home on any layout hauling marble, construction material or any other commodity typically found in an open gondola.

Features:

- Separately applied ladder, brake wheel & brake lines
- Accurate painting & lettering
- Metal couplers and sprung die-cast trucks
- True scale dimensions with accurate details
- Weighted, detailed underframes
- 2-rail cars feature scale wheels and body mounted couplers
- Offered in 2 road numbers
